October 18, 1885: ... three times for an honorable discharge. US Adjutant General reply: enlisted in the Rebel Army and was recaptured in arms against the US Government. As to the enlisting I do not deny it. Under the circumstances I feel justified. I had been a prisoner for nearly a year; and that I did as many others did at the same time. After thinking the matter over I came to the conclusion that it was the only thing we could do to save our lives. We had no shelter, food, or clothing; was naked at the time of our pretended enlistment, and was at the time loyal to the Union, and that we gave ourselves up at the first opportunity. Having thrown away our arms without firing a shot. ...I am inmate of the County Hospital... suffering from the effects of that terrible imprisonment..."

Captain Gillespie expressed the belief that when entering the battle of Fair Oaks/Seven Pines, Virginia, May 29, 1862, he would be killed. Captain Gillespie was on duty at daybreak, under cover of heavy fog. Major Kelly, 96th New York, in command of all pickets was killed and Captain Gillespie took command. At first, the pickets were driven back but Captain Gillespie rallied them and forced the Confederates back. Two days later when the 103rd, positioned north of Williamsburg Road was driven back, Captain Gillespie succeeded in keeping most of the men south of the road together and formed them to the right of Spratt's battery where they remained until the advance line was driven back. He, with two other officers, rallied the men at the intrenchments, where they remained until the entire force was driven back. Captain Gillespie was Killed In Action May 31, 1862, on the line where the last rally of Wessell's Brigade was made in advance of Couch's Division. He was shot through the breast and is buried in Seven Pines National Cemetery D500.
